

Commitment to animal welfare

Aquaculture companies, like ours, have a responsibility to provide quality fish to millions of consumers every day. Without aquaculture there is no fish for everyone, since we provide a very important part of the fish we consume in our country.

The welfare of fish, throughout their life cycle and production phases, is an unavoidable commitment that is part of this great responsibility, together with quality, safety and sustainability.

For this reason, we work hand in hand with APROMAR to develop and implement improvements in animal welfare that go even beyond the legally required standards. Within this framework, the result of collaborative work between aquaculture companies, technicians from the national Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the General Secretariat of Fisheries, scientists and researchers from three universities and other NGOs interested in animal welfare, the Spanish aquaculture sector has achieved the publication of three guides on the animal welfare of fish in Spanish aquaculture, and is currently working on a fourth guide.

These guides, created and validated from rigor and scientific evidence by all relevant actors, faithfully represent our commitment, as a company and as a sector, to the best practices that science and technology can allow us with the welfare of the fish in our facilities.

RIVERFRESH COMMITMENT.
